UC Paris Summer 2015 Students

NOTES ON LIVING EXPENSES

Our past experience indicates that many students on the summer program underestimate the cost of living in Paris for seven weeks. In particular if you are planning on traveling, you should expect to spend a bit more money in Paris than you would in a similar period on your home UC campus. Paris can be an expensive city. There is a useful word in French, though, that doesn't have a direct translation into English: débrouillardise. The word refers to the crafty capacity for resourcefulness, for getting by and even doing well in somewhat adverse conditions. The French can be very good at getting by with little. This newsletter will try to give you an initial sense of how to cultivate your own débrouillardise.

In recent years, exchange rates have fluctuated greatly for the American dollar. As we write this newsletter in mid-March, the Euro (€) costs about $1.10 (a very favorable exchange rate that we have not seen in over a decade!). Given the current economic instability, this exchange rate will almost certainly continue to fluctuate, and we hope it will continue to do so in your favor.

Those of you on financial aid will know that your financial aid packages do not include expenses for what UC calls "personal entertainment or independent travel abroad." It does, however, include funds for what UC calls "incidentals/ transportation/ books," but UC's estimates of those expenses are fairly conservative.

We would say that living on a limited budget is possible (see definition of débrouillardise above) for students who exercise a bit of self-discipline when it comes to the temptations of the annual summer soldes (sales) and overindulgences in things like pâtisseries, café crèmes, and cool drinks at bars or cafés. This newsletter will give some rough estimates for the kinds of expenses that students might also want to factor into their budget. These prices are indicative, but not definitive.

Food

Here is a list indicative of current prices for some of the expenses that students are likely to encounter. It represents the minimal expenses for each of the items. You will be in glamorous Paris, so if you're looking for opportunities to spend much more than these lower-end prices, you'll be sure to find them:

Lunch at a restaurant near the UC Center: 5-20 €
Lunch at one of the local student restaurants ("CROUS"): 3-5 €
Crêpe at a street-side stand: 3-5 €
Sandwich: 3-5 €
Meal deal at McDonalds (le McDo to the French): 8€
Sorbet or Ice-Cream: 4€
Coffee in a café*: espresso 1.20 € standing up at the bar, 2.20-2.50 € sitting down at a table café crème or cappuccino 2.50 € standing up at the bar, 4.50 € sitting down at a table *Starbucks in Paris (yes it exists!): the cost of a grande latte is 3.75 € (takeaway)
Glass of wine in a bar or café: 3-8 €
Beer in a bar or café: 6 €
Dinner to go: 5-10 €
Dinner at a casual sit-down restaurant: 15-25 €
Baguette: 0.90 €
At a grocery store: Loaf of bread: 1.40 € Liter of milk: 1 € A kilogram of apples: 2.80 € 1/4 kilogram of cheese: 3 € 1/4 kilogram of sandwich meat: 3.50 € Bottle of wine: starts at 2 € 1.5 liter bottle of Coca-Cola: 1.50 €

Entertainment

Films

Movie theaters in Paris are typically a little more expensive than they are in California. A full price ticket costs around 10-12 €, but most cinemas have special prices that run from 4-8 € for people under 26 or for students. Morning screenings are sometimes as cheap as 5.80 € for everyone.

Clubs

Paris has a rich nightlife scene with live bands and clubs that specialize in many different kinds of music. You're sure to find something to your taste. They are usually very crowded on weekends when admission can run from 10-20 €. Some special nights can be even more expensive. Regular visits to clubs will certainly make significant dents in student budgets.

Museums and exhibits

Paris is of course home to some of the world's richest collections of art. ACCENT will be providing you with a student identification card that, in the past, has given students free access to the collections of the Musée d'Orsay, the Centre Pompidou, the Musée Carnavalet, the Musée Rodin and the Musée Picasso. Your ACCENT card will very likely give you free admission to these and many other museums, but at the very least it should get you student-priced admission.

Local Public Transportation

Paris is a great city to walk around in. The very idea of the urban stroll was born here and put into action by 19th century flâneurs such as the poet Charles Baudelaire. Paris also offers a very reliable bus, metro and suburban train system that you will undoubtedly use. You will probably want to look into purchasing a Pass Navigo Découverte. It costs 5 € and can be bought in any metro station. Once you have the card, you can purchase unlimited access to public transportation within Paris and the immediate suburbs for 70.00 €* per month. You can also buy a weekly pass for 21.25 €* for certain weeks when you won't need a full month's access to public transportation. Travel to and from the airport or to other destinations in the suburbs is not included with your Pass Navigo and must be purchased separately. Since September 2012, however, if you hold a monthly Pass Navigo, you can use the public transportation system on weekends and on national holidays to zones beyond the city and its immediate suburbs (e.g., to visit the magnificent cathedral at Chartres or to reach the CDG airport) without purchasing a special ticket. Familiarize yourself with the public transportation system, RATP, and all it has to offer in Paris. The site has the very useful feature of providing the easiest way to get from point A to point B. All you have to do is enter your starting and stopping points, and it will give you your best options.

Books, supplies, clothing, and accessories

Your program fees cover the costs of books and Xeroxed readers for your courses. School supplies can be somewhat expensive in Paris, but they also have a certain charm. Former students have, however, found great deals on charming supplies (pens, notebooks, etc.) at two nearby shops (Muji and Hema). If you are on a very tight budget, you may want to bring some school supplies along with you to avoid some of the extra cost.

You will probably need to buy the usual personal supplies, such as toothpaste, lotion, aspirin, etc. These can also be a little more expensive in Paris. A tube of toothpaste costs 2-3 €, a bottle of shampoo 3-5 €, a box of 20 capsules of aspirin 4.5 €. While the weather should range from lovely to downright hot during your stay here, you may want to pack a sweater or two in the event that fickle nature brings a few chilly breezes your way and perhaps an umbrella for any sudden summertime downpours.

Personal Property Insurance

Students should certainly consider taking out personal insurance on the more valuable items that they are likely to bring with them to Paris—laptops, digital cameras, or other expensive electronic devices. Many students in the past have not done so, and, inevitably, some students will lose valuable objects by leaving them in a train or in a restaurant, or having them stolen by pickpockets on the look-out for tourists. Your family may be able to add a short-term rider to a current insurance policy that will cover your more valuable items while you are abroad. It would be a great idea to look into this option. You should also familiarize yourself with your EAP insurance.

Day Trips to Destinations within France

Many of you will want to take advantage of easy access from Paris to culturally important locations within France—the Mont Saint Michel or Giverny, or, further afield yet accessible by the high-speed TGV train, Lyon, Marseille, or Nice. Some of these places are close enough to Paris to make for good day-trips. If reserved far enough in advance, TGV trips to the south cost around 60 € each way. Information about train travel within France can be found on the SNCF website. In conjunction with ACCENT, we will be organizing a few mandatory excursions to places in and around Paris such as Chantilly and Versailles, the cost for which is included in your program fees. More specific information for these excursions will be given at orientation. But if you're already thinking of planning some day or weekend trips, please note the following dates for two of these mandatory excursions in your agenda: Saturday, June 20th and Saturday, July 25th, and plan your travel accordingly.

Travel to Destinations outside France

Many of you will take advantage of Paris's centrality on the continent to travel to other major European cities during your weekends. A number of low-cost airlines offer competitive prices to some of these destinations. Advanced planning is advised, since the longer you reserve your ticket in advance, the cheaper your tickets will be. Train travel is often more expensive than these airlines, but is almost always more reliable. Thalys is the train company that serves cities in North-Western Europe such as Amsterdam, Brussels, or Cologne, while the Eurostar serves London. Information about these trains can also be found on the SNCF website.

The Bottom Line

Please remember that the figures provided in this newsletter are only illustrative, and that you will have a great deal of control in terms of the choices you make over what you actually spend. Eating out, going to clubs or bars several times a week, travel, occasional performances and concerts could bring you to spend more than you would on your home campus, and you should budget accordingly.

A word about banknotes: you will find French merchants and even banks reluctant (or even refusing) to take or change larger banknotes (over 50 €). So if you plan to travel with French currency, be sure to request small denominations from your bank or foreign currency exchange agency.

Former students suggest you should plan your expenses well before you leave California and make arrangements to cover them. We strongly advise you to talk over your expenses with anyone who may be helping you finance your studies in Paris. A pre-departure, part-time job or an extra loan may be good ideas to help you prepare financially to get the most out of your time in Paris.

Thinking of Extending Your Stay?

Are you already wondering if seven weeks in Paris will be enough for you to accomplish all you hope to do while studying abroad? You may be eligible to extend to the UC Paris Fall Program in French and European Studies. Check the program requirements and get pre-approved to extend by speaking with your department advisor.

Best of luck with your planning! We look forward to meeting you when you arrive in June!
